Announcements

New

Important Information about the NCSC ELA/Math Assessments

- 1) NCSC ELA/Math testing window

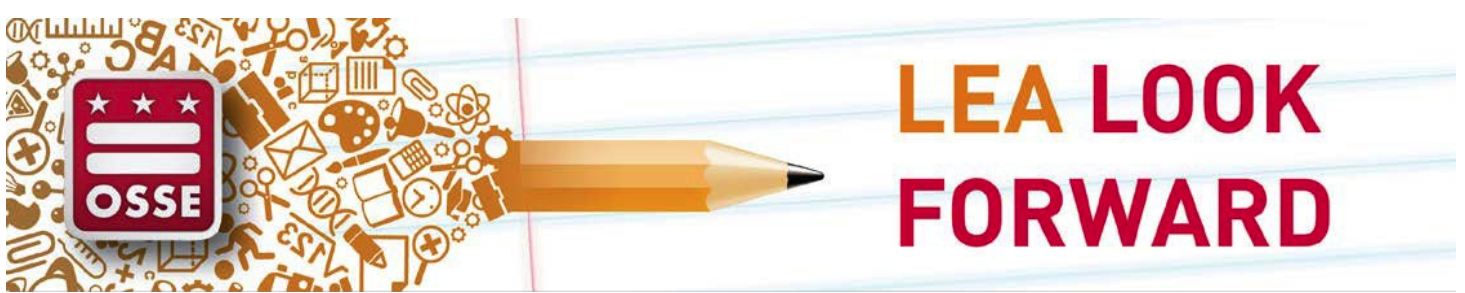

The testing window began on Monday, March 30, 2015 and will conclude on Friday, May 15, 2015.

- 2) Test Administrator (TA) training & NCSC test schedules

NCSC Test Administrators (TAs) should complete certification well in advance of your test schedule to allow for questions and clarifications. All NCSC school test schedules must be submitted to OSSE (osse.assessment@dc.gov) 10 days before the start of NCSC test administration.

- 3) Do not close the test for students who have an observable method of communication

The NCSC assessment data will help us produce an improved assessment design only if every student who has an observable method of communication takes all items, whether they get items wrong, skip some items, or get items correct. Knowing which items a student gets wrong or skips over is as important as knowing which ones the student got right. Do not close the test if students are unable to answer, are skipping questions, or are getting items incorrect. This is essential information to ensure the highest quality, most appropriate tests in the future.

4) Student Response Check (SRC)

The purpose of the SRC (Test Administration Manual, pp. 30, 33) is to ensure that the Test Administrator can clearly identify which answer a student chooses. For students who have an observable method of communication and who clearly select their answers to the test questions by either responding verbally, non-verbally, or using assistive technology (AT), conducting the entire Student Response Check is not necessary; however, test administrators must still select the modes of communication the student will use during the test.

If a student displays observable responses during the Student Response Check, TAs will administer all the test items in ELA and Mathematics. If the student does not have an observable response, the TA will administer the first 4 items of either Mathematics or ELA. If the TA does not observe any response to the first 4 items, the TA may close the test session. If the TA observes a response (correct or incorrect) to at least one of the 4 items, the TA should administer the remainder of the ELA and Mathematics assessments.

For more information, email osse.assessment@dc.gov or call (202) 316-9789.

2014-15 Science Assessment Field Test Guidelines

OSSE will be administering the field test of the new science assessment aligned to Next Generation Science Standards (NGSS) from May 18 to June 19, 2015. The field test is required for students in grades 5, 8, and for high school students enrolled in a biology course. ### Student-led IEPs: Tools You Can Use to Build Self-Determination Skills for Students with Autism Spectrum Disorder and Intellectual Disabilities

Self-determination is an important part of knowing and believing in yourself, knowing what you want your future to be like, and making plans to achieve this future. Students with Autism Spectrum Disorder and Intellectual Disabilities have the right to know and understand the supports that are needed to achieve successful outcomes across home, school, and the community. This hands-on training, presented by Teresa Cogar, will provide participants with an opportunity to explore three self-determination skill building tools: (a) The One Pager, (b) The Good Day Plan, and (c) Goal Setting and Attainment.

Participants will have the opportunity to personalize and differentiate each of the three tools using strategies that have been proven to be successful for students with disabilities who need additional instructional supports. These tools were developed by the Virginia Department of Education’s “I’m Determined Project,” a state directed project that focuses on providing direct instruction and models opportunities to practice self-determined behavior, beginning at the elementary level and continuing through the student’s educational career.

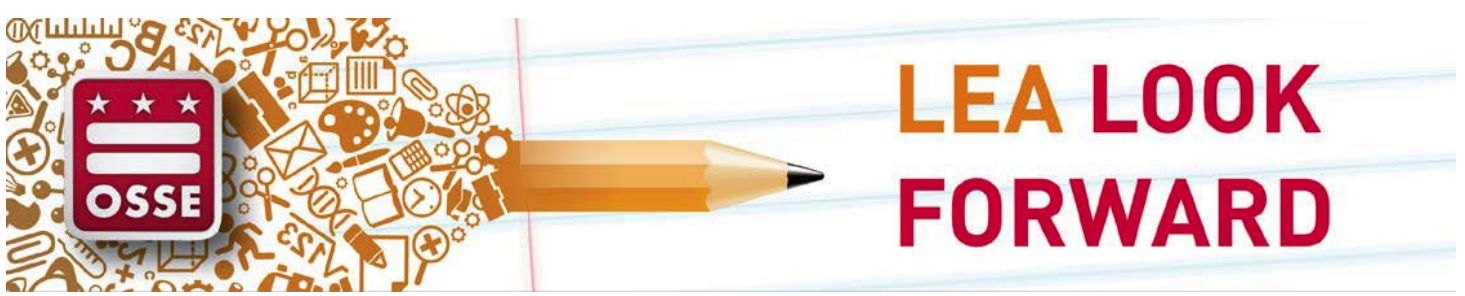

Presenter:                      Teresa Cogar, Training Associate for Virginia Commonwealth University – Autism Center for Excellence

Date:                                Tuesday, May 19, 2015

Time:                                8:30 a.m. – 3:30 p.m.
